Max-imum Impact

This fall, two L.A. transplants added a new fashion line to the mix of projects incubating in our midst. Parisa (born in Tehran and raised in Stockholm) and Max J. Fowles-Pazdro (born in London and raised in Johannesburg) are launching Maxfowles here in town after a New York stint that proved creatively satisfying. "Living in New York made us take the first step," says Parisa. "The creativity of the city really drives you to pursue your dreams." Those dreams manifested in L.A., in a stunning line of leather biker jackets, denim with quilted leather panels, classically sexy blouses, and dresses that fuse wool and leather in various incarnations that can transition from the office to a cocktail party. "The silhouettes are feminine, yet heavy in fabrics and leathers," says Max. The Hollywood Hills-based couple may be new to the fashion world but their momentum is palpable; they are already developing an additional sportswear line, MF

Sport, that will enable them to use less formal fabrics but still maintain the line's statement-making aesthetic. With a debut collection this gorgeous, there is no telling where Maxfowles could go, but the odds are good that it's already inside L.A.'s chicest closets. At Elyse Walker, 15306 Antioch St., Pacific Palisades, 310.230.8882, maxfowles.com —Anne Frances

FAB COLLAB

Smokin' She sexed up Gucci, YSL and Vogue Paris, and this month, Carine Roitfeld collaborates with MAC Cosmetics in addition to launching CR Fashion Book. The notorious editrix and stylist, known for her trademark smoky eye and pale lips, curated a collection to recreate her own look. $15-$44, at *MAC Cosmetics Pro Store, 133 N.
